Alexander Skarsgard on toxic masculinity and 'The Kill Team'

The new film opens in theaters this weekend.

PAT KING

We expect a lot from those who are supposed to lead by example.

Whether it's our parents, school teachers or commanding officers, we look to those in places of authority to have some sort of moral high ground for us to follow.

In "The Kill Team," Alexander Skarsgard portrays a morally dubious sergeant in the U.S. military during the Afghanistan invasion who uses questionable tactics, including murder of innocent civilians, to incentivize his soldiers.

The film was written and directed by Dan Krauss and was based on real events Krauss chronicled in his 2013 documentary of the same name. The film also stars Nat Wolff as Andrew Briggman, one of Sergeant Deeks' soldiers who is skeptical of his tactics, and Adam Long as Rayburn, who is more than willing to dirty his hands for the sergeant he is desperate to please. Skarsgard turns in an unforgettable and haunting performance of a complex villain that should remind us of the horrors of war.

I recently spoke with Skarsgard about the film and his fascination with toxic characters.

What initially drew you to the character of Sergeant Deeks?

I was fascinated by the character of Deeks. I thought it was an opportunity to play someone with a real darkness but in a way that wasn't the stereotype of a villain where you fall in to the old tropes. It felt very different and the character had a certain charm and an ability to win over the soldiers' will without intimidating them.

He's such an interesting villain in that his motivations are both calculating and genuine at the same time.

In his mind, what they're doing is obviously justified. They're all collaborators. Everyone outside of the perimeter, when we leave the base, they're all in on it. If we kill one of them, we save 10 of ours. He's lost a lot of his friends over the years.

So in his mind, everyone on the outside, if they're not a part of the combative enemy unit they're helping them out. He feels morally that what he is doing is right. He's not going out there to do something that he thinks is incorrect. For him, it's very clear. The rules of engagement are different when you're out in the field than when you're behind a desk writing them. You just have to adapt and it's crucial that these soldiers fall in line. He uses that sense of loyalty to his advantage. I was really interested in how he plays these soldiers against each other. In a way, it's almost like a love story. Because he uses jealousy. He decides to give one soldier attention and in turn making the others jealous and then they get a little attention. It's about sparsing that out in a way to get them to basically eat out of his hand and get them to do what he wants them to do. I enjoyed exploring that dynamic.

Even though these characters are soldiers in the middle of a war zone, they are all young adults and vie for Sergeant Deeks' attention like he's a father figure or a 'cool teacher'.

Exactly. When you have someone in a position of authority, it's so important to win his or her acceptance that you kind of surrender your own morality. They look up to Deeks so much. When he shows up, he's everything they aspire to be. He's a tough soldier, he knows everything, he's seen everything. These guys are kids, they're rookies. So whatever he says, they will do anything just to win his approval.

While Briggman is trying to win over Deeks in order to climb the chain of command, Rayburn is more in it to do Deeks' dirty work by killing those who may be standing in their way. This causes some tension between the two soldiers.

That is something that Deeks acknowledges and uses to his advantage. Because when Briggman starts to resist or shows him autonomy in terms of his moral choices, Deeks quickly turns away from him and leaves him alone and leaves him vulnerable. Deeks knows that if he leaves him out in the cold for a bit, by having Rayburn as his pet, it's going to be so much easier to win him back over.

There are many cases where Deeks uses his own family life back home as emotional collateral to make sure that Briggman does not tell the higher command of what is actually going on. It puts Briggman in a tough spot.

It shows complexity. I think it's important to show the audience how fallible we all are and how easy it is. This is a heightened situation, in a war zone, when you are surrounded by people who are supposed to protect you. Your brothers in arms. But then that makes it more difficult to turn against them even when your morality is being compromised. So that makes it hard and Deeks knows that and uses it.

Between "Big Little Lies," "On Becoming a God in Central Florida" and this film, you have been playing some prime examples of toxic masculinity. In a way, it's doing the world a service in showing men how not to behave. Have you been actively seeking out those kinds of roles?

It's not something I've been seeking out, even though I'm fascinated by these topics. When you can find a well-written script and a character who is fascinating and exists in that universe without being didactic or preachy, I find that those are often the projects I gravitate towards. They all speak to something quite topical and timely.

Have these roles made you want to play "the hero" in other projects?

There was definitely more levity in "On Becoming a God..." My character is gambling away what little money they have and jeopardizing his family's future. But at the end of the day, the tone of it wasn't as dark as some of my other projects. I've done a couple of things that have been lighter. I just finished "Godzilla vs. Kong" — that character is definitely not a dark and disturbed character. That was quite cathartic doing something so different. I think I needed that (laughs).

3 things you need to check out at the ATK Boston EATS Festival

Get ready to feast all weekend long when the ATK Boston EATS Festival returns for three days of foodie fun. America's Test Kitchen is pulling out all the stops this year as the iconic cooking program celebrates its 20th anniversary. Here are three things you need to check out when the fest returns Oct. 24-26.

CHEF'S TABLE

The fun kicks off on Thursday night with an extra special event that you won't want to miss. For the first time ever, ATK is throwing an intimate seated dinner where fans will get the chance to feast alongside stars from the show. Attendees will have the chance to munch on hors d'oeuvres and sip cocktails from the new cookbook "How to Cocktail" before enjoying a multicourse meal. Bridget Lancaster, Julia Collin Davison, Jack Bishop and more will be in attendance.

CHEERS TO 20 YEARS

The celebration continues on Friday night with an evening of libations in honor of the big milestone. In addition to ATK stars, a who's who list of local chefs and bartenders will also be on hand to serve up mouthwatering bites and delicious drinks. The lineup includes Will Gilson of Puritan & Co., Joanne Chang of Flour Bakery + Café, Jackson Cannon of The Hawthorne, as well as Naomi Levy of Better Sorts Social Club.

Be sure to snag a VIP ticket in order to enjoy early entry, a private lounge area, special wine and food pairings, plus a swag bag featuring a copy of ATK's 20th anniversary book.

THE MAIN EVENT

Of course, you definitely don't want to miss the main portion of the festival on Saturday. Indulge on libations and all-you-can-eat bites from some of the region's most talented culinary stars and bartending experts. Throughout the afternoon, ATK fans will also have the chance to check out cooking demonstrations, as well as book signings and photo ops. Tiffani Faison, the James Beard Award-nominated chef behind hotspots like Tiger Mama, Sweet Cheeks Q and Orfano, will make an appearance on Saturday to demo an exclusive recipe for fans. METRO STAFF

Peter Hook on reclaiming the songs of New Order

The musician will play the New Order albums "Technique" and "Republic" on tour.

PAT KING

Peter Hook knows that he still has his work cut out for him. The legendary bassist of the seminal British post-punk band Joy Division and later the alternative-pop sensation New Order has been touring the world with his band, Peter Hook and the Light, devoting tours to recreating some of the classic recordings throughout his career for audiences dying to hear them. For his current tour, Peter Hook and the Light will be performing the New Order albums "Technique" and "Republic" in full as well as some fan favorites and a set devoted to the Joy Division era.

That's the simple and pleasant part of the story, of course. When I spoke with the music legend over the phone, he explained to me that he would not be performing these records on the road — 13 at this point with only three left to go in the catalog, in his words — if it were not for the unceremonious split of New Order back in 2007. Since then, Hook formed this band as a way to just simply play music. But when the band New Order reformed without him, he took it personally. And rightfully so.

"When New Order split up in 2007, one of my great frustrations with the band was the songs that we didn't play," Hook explains. "We played a very similar set list all the time. There's so many great songs that we just ignored, that Barney [Bernard Sumner, vocalist and multi-instrumentalist of New Order] didn't want to play. Yeah, it was a hell of a frustration. So the thing is, is that when I started doing Joy Division, celebrating Joy Division in 2010, it seemed sort of logical to do the same thing with New Order. Now, when they found out that I was going to celebrate New Order, I'm pretty sure that's when they decided to get the band back together again behind my back, you know? And excluding me, shall we say, from it, because they knew that I was going to do New Order. Maybe they thought they were either going to get it back or I was going to steal it from them. But I mean, certainly I had no intention of using the New Order name. To me it's all about the music. I don't want to pretend to be something I'm not. It's about enjoying the music that I helped to write, and that everybody else is ignoring."

While Hook has been out on the road with his band, treating fans to performances of these albums in their intended sequences and playing, airtight, precision performances, I ask him if he feels a sense of reclamation of the material they are playing. To that question, Hook offered a blunt yet frank answer.

"Yeah, I mean put it this way: I've got a great relationship with New Order's songs. I just wish I had great relationships with the other members of New Order," says Hook. "I've got the songs back. Me and the songs are in love. It's the honeymoon period. We're all over each other. Unfortunately, with the other members of New Order, we're still in the ... shall we say cutting the trousers in half and looking at the car with a saw, and things like that. Very, very bad divorce still ongoing, shall we say."

As such an integral part of the classic sounds Joy Division and the innovative dance-forward territory that New Order created during this period, can you really blame Hook for his enthusiasm for celebrating the material night after night? With both of these records in particular, Hook is not only rekindling his love of material that may have been made during a fraught and tense time in the band, but fully realizing songs he believed never reached their potential in the studio.

"The interesting thing about playing 'Technique' and 'Republic,' obviously they're very different. And they were also written ... maybe I can't say under very different circumstances. But certainly one, we were definitely a group, shall we say. The second one, we were definitely not a group. I think our attitude toward each other was probably pretty much the same, truth be told. But 'Technique' is very well known in England, and 'Republic' isn't. Whereas in America, 'Republic' was our best-selling album. So even much bigger than 'Technique.' So it's going to be interesting to see what the reaction is. I mean it's a tough LP. 'Technique' is tough to play. It's not easy. 'Republic,' because of its different feel, is quite difficult to play. And there's a wonderful sense of achievement when you do get it right. Probably, people don't notice. But we do, because we've had to work so hard to get it up to a standard," says Hook.

Reclaiming these records, in a figurative way, is no small feat for Hook and he is finding both a sense of enjoyment and closure while celebrating them for the influential achievements that they are. That is to say, no matter how challenging it can be to pull off the material night after night.

"This [set] is quite a challenge, actually. We've played long sets before, but this set that we'll be playing in America is two hours and 45 minutes. It starts off with a Joy Division set, then we do 'Technique,' then 'Republic,'" says Hook. "So yeah, it is a hell of a set. But I must admit, it flies by. I'm enjoying it immensely, absolutely. It's probably the only time that I truly relax with anything [in] regards to New Order, is when I play the music. Because outside of playing the music, it's still so angry and so dysfunctional. But yeah, the only respite you get is when you play the music."

Meet Paula, the world's oldest sloth

New Guinness World Record

A sloth named Paula has recently achieved the Guinness World Record as the representative of the world's longest-lived species after turning 50. According to specialists, in human years, that equals to around 90 years of age. Paula's caregivers say that despite some signs of age on her fur and nails, she is still very healthy. www.guinnessworldrecords.com

An extraordinary case

This super-senior animal has reached more than double the typical lifespan of two-toed sloths in the wild (20 years) and has also exceeded the standard captive age range of 30-40. Hailing from South America, where she was captured in the wild (a practice no longer endorsed by zoos), Paula has lived at Halle Zoo in Saxony-Anhalt, Germany, since 1971. www.guinnessworldrecords.com

ICE CREAM CONE GRUMBLE

Well, yesterday I went to a fast food store and requested 2 ice cream cups to go. The lady comes back with 2 cones. I protested getting cones, not cups, and she returns with the cones simply upended in the cups. I said it was a to-go order so she put on tops. Then I had to ask for a bag since it was to-go and I was on my way home after shopping with a cart.

I took out the 2 cones and poured them into one cup. They both then fit in one cup easily, not quite filling in fact. So if you are buying cones, recall that fact.

Aries Take care of unfinished business. Less talk and more action will give you better insight into what you should do next. Arguing will be a waste of time and energy.

Taurus Your desire for change, excitement and novelty will prompt you to make a move. Take an all-or-nothing approach and enjoy the ride. Partnerships are accentuated.

Gemini Don't overlook the obvious. Someone will play mind games with you if you are too open about your feelings. Look inward and focus on health and emotional well-being.

Cancer You are overdue for a makeover, change of location or new daily routine. Shake things up and let your heart guide you. Love, self-improvement, children and relationships are favored.

Leo If something needs to be done, do it. Don't wait for someone else to step in or complain. A change at home may not be something you want, but it may be necessary.

Virgo You need to get out more. Experience is the spice of life, and it will give you plenty to think about regarding your current situation and where you see yourself heading.

Libra Don't respond to demanding people. You have a choice, and you should put your energy and effort into something that will benefit you, not someone else.

Scorpio You can make a strategic move that will help you financially, emotionally or legally. Look at every angle and make a practical, carefully considered adjustment. Romance is featured.

Sagittarius Listen to others, but don't take everything you hear literally. Someone will offer information that isn't accurate. Don't let your emotions get the better of you. Separate fact from fiction.

Trump says Turkey's ceasefire in northern Syria now permanent Economic sanctions have been lifted.

U.S. President Donald Trump said on Wednesday a ceasefire in northern Syria is now permanent and he lifted sanctions on Turkey as a result, rejecting criticism of his decision to pull out U.S. troops and allow Kurdish allies to come under attack.

Trump's move, announced in a White House speech, did not blunt attacks from U.S. lawmakers over his abrupt decision early this month to withdraw U.S. troops out of northeastern Syria to clear the way for a Turkish invasion.

Trump described the truce as a "major breakthrough" negotiated by a team led by Vice President Mike Pence. Trump said he had instructed Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin to rescind the sanctions imposed on Turkey in response to its moves against the Kurds "unless something happens that we are not happy with."

"Countless lives are now being saved as a result of our negotiation with Turkey, an outcome reached without spilling one drop of American blood: no injuries, nobody shot, nobody killed," Trump said.

But questions remained about Trump's policy and Congress was still working on a sanctions package of its own intended to punish Turkey for its cross-border offensive.

Kurdish allies who helped the United States in its war against Islamic State militants felt abandoned by Trump, whose policy created an opening that Russia is capitalizing on by moving forces into the area. The fate of Islamic State militants in Syrian Kurdish prisons also remained up in the air.

Controversy surrounding Trump's Syria pullout has contributed to a climate of political chaos in Washington, where Democrats are seeking to remove Trump from office through impeachment over his attempts to get Ukraine to investigate Democratic rival Joe Biden.

Senate Democratic leader Chuck Schumer took to the Senate floor to excoriate Trump over Syria.

"Three weeks after first announcing the troop withdrawal, the president does not seem to have a clear strategy for securing the enduring defeat of ISIS (Islamic State) and fixing the mess he's created in Syria," said Schumer.

Trump continued his drumbeat of criticism of past U.S. efforts to keep American forces in the Middle East.

The United States will "let someone else fight over this long, blood-stained sand," he said.

"How many Americans must die in the Middle East in the midst of these ancient sectarian and tribal conflicts?" he said. "I am committed to pursuing a different course, one that leads to victory for America."

Driver arrested after 39 found dead in truck near London

The industrial truck's origin point was in Bulgaria.

British police found the bodies of 39 people inside a truck at an industrial estate near London on Wednesday and said they had arrested the driver on suspicion of murder.

The discovery of the bodies — 38 adults and one teenager — was made in the early hours after emergency services were alerted to people in a truck container on an industrial site in Grays, about 20 miles (32 km) east of central London.

Police said the trailer had arrived at nearby docks having traveled from Zeebrugge in Belgium and the bodies were found just over an hour later.

The red cab unit of the truck was believed to have originated in Ireland. It had "Ireland" emblazoned on the windscreen along with the message "The Ultimate Dream." The driver, a 25-year-old man from Northern Ireland, remained in custody.

Prime Minister Boris Johnson said he was appalled by the news and was receiving regular updates about the investigation which was focused on human trafficking.

"We know that this trade is going on — all such traders in human beings should be hunted down and brought to justice," he said.

All those in the container were pronounced dead at the scene after the emergency services were called to the Waterglade Industrial Park, not far from docks on the River Thames.

Police said the trailer had traveled from Belgium to Purfleet and landed shortly after 12:30 a.m. on Wednesday (2330 GMT Tuesday). It left the port on the truck at about 1:05 a.m. and ambulance services notified police about the discovery of the bodies at 1:40 a.m.

Originally it was thought both parts of the vehicle had entered Britain at Holyhead in North Wales on Saturday and to have originally started its journey in Bulgaria.

The Bulgarian Foreign Ministry said while the vehicle was registered in Bulgaria by a company owned by an Irish woman on June 19, 2017, it had left the next day and never returned.

Bulgarian Prime Minister Boyko Borissov said his country had no other connection with the deaths.

Prime Minister Leo Varadkar said Irish authorities would carry out any investigations necessary if it was established that the truck had passed through Ireland.

Police officers in forensic suits spent the day inspecting the large white container on the truck next to warehouses and had sealed off much of the surrounding area of the industrial site with large green barriers as they carried out their investigation.

The truck was later driven away to a secure location at nearby Tilbury Docks so the bodies could be recovered.

"At this stage, we have not identified where the victims are from or their identities and we anticipate this could be a lengthy process," Essex Police Deputy Chief Constable Pippa Mills told reporters.

"I appreciate how much attention this incident will continue to attract and the public and media appetite to understand what's happened. We also need to understand what has happened," she added.

in the back of trucks, often seeking to reach the United Kingdom from the European mainland.

Separately on Wednesday, police in the neighboring county of Kent found nine people alive in a truck on the M20 motorway, heading towards London, Sky News reported.

In Britain's biggest illegal immigrant tragedy in 2000, customs officials found the bodies of 58 Chinese people crammed into a tomato truck at the southern port of Dover. It had begun its journey in Zeebrugge.

Jeremy Corbyn, the leader of the opposition Labour Party, said the latest deaths were an unbelievable human tragedy that needed answers. REUTERS

Huge felines become part of artworks

Cats inspire the artist

The 34-year-old creative director Andrey Shcherbak owns an Instagram account with 30k followers that features giant cats. According to the Russian collage fan, he did not earn a penny from posting his images on the social network, as he creates these works as a hobby. Each photograph usually features himself and a huge cat (he enlarges the animal with a photo editor). Felines appear on the streets, in supermarkets, on football fields, in the woods, in prisons and even as part of famous artists' paintings.

Pats set for Browns showdown

The Patriots look to move to 8-0 for the 2019 season as they return to Foxboro.

MATT BURKE
matt.burke@metro.us

Here are three things to look for Sunday (4:25 p.m., CBS) as the 2-4 Browns come to Gillette to take on the 7-0 Patriots:

Tired legs?

This could be a bit of a trap game for the Pats as they will be playing on a short week, having played on Monday night and then right back on Sunday. The Browns, meanwhile, will be well-rested coming off their bye week.

Browns quarterback

Baker Mayfield had his best game of the 2018 season coming off a bye on the road against the Bengals, as he lit them up for four touchdowns and zero picks to finish with a 143.9 passer rating.

Also worth noting is that the Patriots have an enormous game a week from Sunday as they'll face Lamar Jackson and the 5-2 Ravens in a prime-time affair. Bill Belichick will likely be on top of it, but the Patriots should not take the talented Browns lightly.

The Kitchens sink

Many are billing Belichick vs. Browns coach Freddie Kitchens as the biggest coaching mismatch in NFL history.

That might not be too far off considering just how atrocious the rookie HC has been so far in 2019.

Kitchens was thoroughly outwitted right out of the shoot in Week 1 of the season as Mike Vrabel's Titans (who run a lot of the same stuff as the Pats) blasted Cleveland at the Browns' place, 43-13.

Since then, Kitchens and the Browns have lost games to the Rams (20-13), 49ers (31-3) and Seahawks (32-28). They also beat the Jets in Week 2 (23-3) and in their best showing of the season – the Ravens on the road in Week 4 (40-25).

The Browns should use some of the game plan that allowed them to topple the Ravens against the Pats on Sunday afternoon. Key to that win over Baltimore was the running of Nick Chubb, who finished with a whopping 165 yards and three touchdowns on the ground.

Expect Kitchens to dial up some trick plays in this one (Jarvis Landry can throw it) and for the Browns to go for it on fourth down – something they have been doing a lot of lately.

Evolving offense

Sony Michel had a nice

Sony Michel has struggled to find a rhythm so far this season.

fantasy night on Monday against the Jets as he found the end zone three times, but the second-year back still does not have a 100-yard outing on his resume in 2019. In the regular season last year, Michel produced four 100-yard rushing days and tacked on two more in the postseason.

The Patriots have been trying to get Michel more involved in the passing game, but the former Georgia star just can't seem to grip the football when it comes to him via the air. He had a notable third-down drop on a screen pass early on against the Jets.

So, Michel's progress will be something to watch for Sunday afternoon, as will the debut of new receiver Mohamed Sanu.

ENOUGH ABOUT BRADY'S FUTURE

Let's go back in time. The year is 2002. It's the middle of February. You're flipping back and forth on TV between Joe Thornton setting up Glen Murray for one-timers and Antoine Walker doing the wiggle in front of his bench after a big three, all while wondering if Johnny Damon's recent signing will help the Red Sox finally win a World Series.

Chances are you're wearing a Patriots "Super Bowl Champions" T-shirt. But you're not spoiled yet. You might even still be in shock over Adam Vinatieri's 48-yard field goal just a few weeks prior that put an end to the "Greatest Show on Turf" and gave the Patriots their first championship in franchise history.

Now imagine being told, in that moment, that Tom Brady would still be New England's quarterback 17 years later, in October 2019, and the Patriots — having won six total Super Bowls during Brady's career — would be 7-0 and on a mission to finish the regular season with a perfect 16-0 record for a second time.

You'd probably laugh, take a sip of your beverage and yell at your TV for Jumbo Joe to "shoot the puck!"

But you should've believed it, because it's true.

Yet, here we are in 2019, as spoiled as spoiled can be, and the top story revolves around Brady's plans for next year. Not this year. Next year.

The speculation only gets worse whenever Brady is asked about his future, as he continues to leave the door open to any and all possibilities. But here's what I know about next season: Brady is not playing for another NFL team.

Will he retire? It's obviously possible, and that day is certainly going to come soon. But if he does play next year, will it be for another team? No way.

That's my own personal opinion. And it'll be my opinion until I see the news that Brady has signed somewhere else.

It's been reported that Brady recently bought a home in Connecticut. For the people who say, "He'll never commute to Foxboro" — what, you think he's going to commute from Connecticut to Enjoy the here and now with Tom Brady.

CETTY IMAGES

Chicago and play for the Bears? You think Brady will commute from Connecticut to Tennessee for practice every day with the Titans? If anything, Brady purchasing a home in Connecticut tells me that he's getting closer to retirement than he is to playing for another NFL team.

Don't let Adam Scheffer's speculation fool you. The ESPN insider was on Monday Night Football pregame this week saying he believes Brady is "setting up" for leaving the Patriots after this season.

Allow me to remind you that it wasn't too long ago Scheffer was dead wrong for scolding us all about how "the Patriots are not trading Jimmy Garoppolo!" Well, the Patriots ended up trading Garoppolo. And really, to nobody's surprise other than those who thought Bill Belichick was going to slap a $23 million franchise tag on the backup quarterback.

We spend so much time worrying about Brady's successor and Brady's future that we rarely get to enjoy what he's still doing in the present. And right now, he's still doing something that you would've never believed, had I told you back in 2002, before we were spoiled with championship after championship.

Times are a lot better now, thanks to Brady. Embrace it. Embrace him. Because eventually, we'll all be back to yelling at our TVs every February.
